Sentence Connectors
(Conjunctive Adverbs)
Showing Time Sequence

A sentence connector or conjunctive adverb is a type of word that connects two independent clauses or sentences, showing the relationship between them. These connectors can indicate sequence, contrast, addition, cause and effect, and other relationships.

In this unit, you get familiar with the sentence connectors which show a time sequence. Time sequence refers to the order in which events occur, typically from the earliest to the latest. It's a way of organizing information chronologically to show how one event follows another. Time sequence is crucial in storytelling, historical accounts, process descriptions, and any context where understanding the progression of events over time is important.

Here is a comprehensive list of sentence connectors or conjunctive adverbs that indicate time sequence, helping to structure events in chronological order:

Initial Events

- First
- Firstly
- Initially
- At the beginning

Subsequent Events

- Then
- Next
- After that
- Later
- Afterwards
- Subsequently
- Soon after

Simultaneous Events

- Meanwhile
- In the meantime
- At the same time

Concluding Events

- Finally
- Lastly
- In the end
- At last
- Eventually

These connectors help in clearly and logically presenting the sequence of events.

A Paragraph Containing Sentence Connectors Indicating Time Sequence:

First, the sun peeked over the horizon, casting a golden hue across the sleepy village. Initially, the streets were quiet, and the only sounds were the chirping birds heralding the dawn. Then, as the morning progressed, the villagers began to stir, and soon after, the marketplace buzzed with activity. Meanwhile, children laughed and played, their joy echoing through the alleys. Later, the aroma of freshly baked bread wafted from the bakery, drawing people in. After that, the town square filled with lively conversations and bustling stalls. Subsequently, the afternoon sun blazed overhead, and villagers sought shade under the ancient oak tree. Finally, as the day drew to a close, a soft twilight enveloped the village, bringing with it a sense of peace and reflection.
